

Qualitative Research Forum

Postgraduate and Postdoctoral Research In Progress

About this Event

This event is being presented by postgraduate and postdoctoral researchers:

Keira Pratt-Boyden is a qualitative health researcher and medical anthropologist by background. Her thesis (2022) explored mental health service survivors' rejection of and response to the biomedical mental health system through activism, mutual support and indeterminate ways of being. She will use this research to reflect on stubborn and important questions about polyphonic perspectives in knowledge production.

Hannah Mortimer has a background in socio-cultural anthropology, archaeology and sociology. She is a postgraduate researcher based in the Centre for Rural Policy Research (CRPR). Her PhD involves ethnographic fieldwork on livestock farms in Devon, investigating the feeding of, and caring for, beef cattle within regenerative systems. Her presentation is about: Caring and Feeding with Cattle: An Ethnographic Investigation.

Amy Hancock is a Therapeutic Radiographer working as a Senior Lecturer in Medical Imaging. She is a qualitative researcher interested in lived experience. She will be talking about: Co-production: working together to create a shared sense of compassion.

The ninth meeting will be on Monday, 6th March from 12:30 – 14:00 hours by Zoom.

Please note that these events are only open to members of staff and students at the University of Exeter.
